Some people have talked of Indianapolis getting into the National day ball is played here, for without Sunday games the city could not support a club. Indianapolis is the only city that won't have Sunday ball in the American Association this year, and the week-day attendance | Rose Polytechnic Defeated Franklin will have to be very large, for if it isn't the Association may find another city next year. People have laughed at the idea of 'no Sunday games, no ball club,' but it is more of a stern business proposition than they may think." and will play three games instead of four. Wednesday will be the first ladies' day of Paul will be the attraction the remainder of the week.

The stenographic report of the discussions at the meeting of the executive committee of the National League in New York last week would be more interesting to the public just now than was the lengthy report made of the meeting of the League last December. At the conclusion of Friday night's session Chairman John T. I that the committee had outlined a plan | pitcher; Schuller, third base.

of action against the American League, but he would not give its details. His reason is obvious, for it would not do to allow the enemy to know just what kind of a campaign is to be carried on, but the public is much interested just the same. The court decision last week added an interest to the star players' gallery, and it would not be surprising to see many of the players change uniforms before long. The National | The day was miserably cold and there was | has tried young players, thinking they only a handful of spectators. Score: would make good and would satisfactorily fill the places formerly occupied by some of the men who jumped to the American, Purdue 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 4 0-7 14 2 standing. but the National club owners want the stars back, not only because they know more about the game and play better ball, but as a drawing attraction and blow to the American. Just how many of the stars will be secured again by the National is not known, but it is safe to say that negotiations are now pending whereby strong efforts will be made to induce many of the players to return to the old fold.

The story of the $100,000 war fund has been revived. It is claimed the National League clubs have each subscribed $12,500 to be used to fight the American League | and struck out twelve of the twenty-four | in securing the return of the players that | men who faced him. Score: jumped to Johnson's organization. Chairman Brush laughed at the idea when the matter was first given out after the National League peace settlement, and there seems to be no great excuse for believing such a story at this time. The National will depend more on the law to secure the return of players than on an enormous ham College ball team administered a sefund of money, but still there may be a vere defeat to Butler University this after- golf players. fund to act as extra inducement to have the stars find their way back to the Napractically wrecked. The American ex- ler played a creditable game, Score: nected to do big business this season on account of the attraction it had to offer, Butler 0 2 0 2 0 0 7 2 5-18 but if the attraction in the form of star players is lost it cannot expect to play to large crowds, especially in cities where there is opposition. The American may have to return to 25 and 50-cent ball and authorize a reduction in Johnson's salary, His salary was increased at the Detroit meeting this spring to $7,500.

xxx Since the National League his assumed the upper hand in baseball, and the utter lack of control of players in all organizations has been so pronounced, the question has come up among baseball men of the advisability of another national agreement. The game prospered better when the National League controlled baseball and there was a national agreement than it has since, and it is very probable that the control of the game will be reorganized next

"I think this zeason will see the finish of the Players' Protective Association," said a member of the Chicago team, who knows the inside workings of the organization. "I can say for certain that there are several members of the Chicago team who have not paid their dues for last season, and who are not at all anxious to pay up what they owe the organization." Players' Protective Association would have been a good thing had it been properly conducted, but when its officers are guilty of double dealing it cannot hope to be successful with anything it undertakes.-Pittsburg Telegraph.

Niles, a third baseman living at Sturgis, Mich., has written to this city, making for a position on the American Association team. This fact in itrelf would not be of a particularly stariling nature, but there is a circumstance in connection with Niles's application that makes it decidedly novel. Fearing that Manager Strobel would not know much about him, he gives as reference a certain ball player who used to canter around the infield for his good points. Strobel did not know the man to whom he is referred, but fears that he will not be able to get much information from him, as the fellow was hanged several months ago for the murder of a young woman. It is not probable that Niles will find a place here.-Toledo Blade. Niles might apply to some of the American or Western League clubs, as manage s in those organizations are not particular where they have to go for reference about players.
